Broad location of Growth

The location of "new housing and employment must be built close to existing services and facilities (my emphasis) so that people do not have to travel far to get to schools, shops, leisure facilities or work-places". This statement is, in some respects, challenged by the growth in villages option. Public transport in rural areas is very limited, and with few footways and cycle lanes sustainable forms of transport, particularly during the dark winter months, is neither a safe or attractive option. (See PO14: Transport), which aims to "minimise the need to travel and promote sustainable forms of transport". Therefore residents of rural homes are heavily reliant on having access to a car as the only practical form of transport. I feel that new homes in villages would need to be small scale developments and carefully located to avoid putting extra pressure on rural lanes, adding to the number of daily car journey's made and increasing pollution and congestion as a result.

Distribution of Sites for Housing

The distribution of new housing is extremely important to the District. Whilst I appreciate housing development within villages can have benefits to the community, the number of homes planned, and building style, should be carefully controlled so as to maintain the character and appearance of the existing settlement. Houses built within Warwick District should ensure that people who work here have the opportunity to live in the District. With the transport links to Solihull being good, homes built in the villages to the north west of Warwick could be of considerable benefit to neighbouring Solihull Borough Council's housing needs. For this reason new housing developments within these villages need to be of small scale and proportionate to the size of the current settlements.

Mixed Communities and a Wide Choice of Homes

New housing built at 'achievable prices' needs to remain so, and alteration of these properties, controlled with robust policy in place to control disproportionately large extensions. A balance of housing size, suitable for differing needs, must be maintained. Furthermore, a 3 or 4 bedroom property generally requires less land, less energy to heat and less resources to build, giving a considerable environmental gain over 5 and 6 bedroom properties which are becoming increasingly common in this area with an inevitably high price tag.

Green Belt

This presents an enormous dilemma and balancing act. As a most highly valued and non-renewable resource, Green Belt must be protected wherever possible. All alteration to the boundaries should be kept to the absolute minimum necessary and maximum use made of brownfield (previously developed land). Once Green Belt land is lost to development, it is lost forever, and in many cases this loss would involve productive farmland.

Alteration to the Green Belt in villages should be confined to land within the settlement envelope so as not to allow new housing developments to spread out into the surrounding countryside. Any changes to Green Belt boundaries must involve the full consultation of Parish Councils, with their input carrying very considerable weight.
